

PASS THE PEBBLE

Most of the time when you ask your child, “What did you do today?” the answer is, “Nothing.” Try playing this game to open communication and to find out what is happening during your child’s day

Find a pebble or another small object and, while the family is sitting together at the table, explain that it is a “talking stone.” Whoever is holding the pebble gets to share something interesting that happened during the day. Having a “talking stone” will help you to stay involved in your child’s life, and your child will like hearing about your day, too.

PASS THE PEBBLE

Most of the time when you ask your child, “What did you do today?” the answer is, “Nothing.” Try playing this game to open communication and to find out what is happening during your child’s day

Find a pebble or another small object and, while the family is sitting together at the table, explain that it is a “talking stone.” Whoever is holding the pebble gets to share something interesting that happened during the day. Having a “talking stone” will help you to stay involved in your child’s life, and your child will like hearing about your day, too.